ALIEN CONTACT IS COMING, SPOOKY GHOST FACE & ORANGE ORBS

FORMER NASA SCIENTIST SEEKS PROOF THAT REALITY IS A SIMULATION

Could our reality be a simulated one? This intriguing question, popularized by the 1999 film The Matrix, is now being investigated by former NASA physicist Thomas Campbell. Campbell's experiments aim to uncover whether our world is a computer-generated simulation, according to Yahoo.com.

Campbell, who detailed his experiments in 2017, has inspired scientists at CalPoly to test his hypothesis. His non-profit, the Center for the Unification of Science and Consciousness, funds these efforts, expecting "strong scientific evidence that we live in a computer-simulated virtual reality."

One of Campbell's key experiments involves the double-slit experiment, which traditionally demonstrates how light and matter exhibit both wave and particle characteristics. He believes that without an observer, "the actual recorded information never existed in the first place," supporting his idea that the universe is "participatory."

Swedish philosopher Nick Bostrom also explored this theory in his 2003 paper "Are You Living in a Computer Simulation?" Bostrom's concept involves layers of simulations, while Campbell posits that "consciousness is fundamental to reality."

If successful, Campbell's experiments could radically alter our understanding of reality, potentially revealing deep connections between consciousness and the cosmos. As Campbell states, they could "challenge the conventional understanding of reality."

PSYCHIC PREDICTS ALIEN CONTACT BY 2028

Psychic Athos Salome, known as the Living Nostradamus, predicts that humanity will make contact with extraterrestrial life by 2028, according to a recent article by the Mirror. Salome, who has accurately predicted events such as the death of Queen Elizabeth II and Elon Musk's acquisition of Twitter, claims his alien prediction is already being supported by scientific discoveries.

Last month, Salome stated that "governments and religious bodies will need to grapple with the moral implications" of discovering alien life forms between 2026 and 2028. He believes NASA and the European Space Agency will identify complex life forms on Jupiter's moon Europa within this timeframe.

"The year 2028 will mark the recognition, by people, of the existence among them of inhabitants of other planets," Salome said.

Recent scientific findings support these predictions, according to the Mirror story. Researchers discovered potato-like lumps on the Pacific Ocean seafloor that produce oxygen without light, challenging current understanding of how life emerged on Earth.

Salome commented that these findings should push governments and religious institutions to rethink their views on life and humanity's place in the Universe. "My predictions about the discovery of extra-terrestrial life are being confirmed as new scientific discoveries challenge our understanding of biology and the origins of life," he asserted.

ORANGE ORB SIGHTINGS REPORTED IN ARIZONA

A recent strange report comes from The Singular Fortean Society, which received a detailed report of anomalous orange orb sightings in Arizona from a witness, named Mars, via email on June 5, 2024.

Mars recounted, "One late evening, my family and I were driving back from camping and had to pass through Florence. While on the highway around 10 p.m. in December of 2011 or 2012, I experienced my first UFO sighting. A series of flashing, amber glows appeared over the sky towards the northeast—almost the Superstition Mountain area."

Mars continued, "The lights started low in the sky and moved slowly. They darted to the right and became bigger before disappearing and reappearing as a speck further west. My camera died before I could film everything."

A more recent sighting occurred on May 15, 2023. Mars described, "I was driving towards Gold Canyon headed east on the US 60, at around 7:50 p.m. I see a large orange flash in the clouds close to the horizon. ... A few minutes passed and there it was, the same pattern of either something spinning/rotating in the sky or moving across it with a slow strobe pattern, except this time it was much bigger and closer than I had seen it years ago."

An eerie image captured at the entrance of an attic has sparked interest and debate online, according to Unexplained Mysteries. The photo, posted by Belgian user Jente Andritsos on a Facebook group, initially appears to be an ordinary doorway.

"A friend of mine caught this on camera in his attic.

What do you guys think?" Andritsos wrote.

However, upon enhancing the image's brightness, a human-like face becomes visible in the upper left-hand corner, seemingly floating without attachment. The image quickly gained attention, with users expressing their reactions.

"I'd be moving out, that's what I think," one person commented. Another wrote, "Oh heck no. I'm out."

The nature of the ghostly face remains uncertain. It could be an object hanging in the doorway, a hoax, or something genuinely paranormal. What do you think?

COTTINGLEY FAIRIES PHOTOS: THE TRUTH REVEALED

Over 100 years ago, two young girls released a series of five photographs appearing to show fairies at the bottom of their aunt's garden in Cottingley, West Yorkshire. The images caused a sensation.

The cameras used to create the images were recently analyzed using state-of-the-art CT scanning technology by the University of Bradford's School of Archaeological and Forensic Sciences, according to the Daily Mail. They didn't find any fairies.

Museum curator Ruth Quinn noted, "The Cottingley Fairies cameras show how ordinary people can achieve extraordinary things when coupled with skill and playful creativity." ♦

‘FLYING SAUCER ESOTERIC’ EXPLORES UFO PHENOMENA

By Cheryl Knight-Wilson

Author Maxim Furek’s latest offering, Flying Saucer Esoteric: The Altered States of Ufology, is a mesmerizing journey through the intricate and often enigmatic world of UFOs and extraterrestrial encounters.

Furek, a seasoned paranormal researcher with a diverse background in psychology, addictions, music journalism, and the paranormal, weaves together historical accounts and contemporary investigations to create a comprehensive narrative that is as enlightening as it is thought-provoking.

The book is divided into four distinct parts, each meticulously detailing different eras and pivotal moments in the history of UFO sightings and encounters. Part One takes us back to the days before Christ, exploring ancient theological and astronomical accounts that hint at early extraterrestrial interactions. The progression through time is seamless, with Furek guiding readers from biblical scriptures to the scientific revolutions of Copernicus and Galileo, as well as the groundbreaking theories of Sir Isaac Newton.

Part Two delves into the early 20th century, setting the stage for the modern UFO phenomenon. Furek’s exploration of pre-Roswell events, Charles Fort’s Book of the Damned, and the intriguing Shaver Mystery of the 1940s provides a solid foundation for understanding the cultural and scientific contexts that shaped public perception of UFOs.

In Part Three, Furek brings to life the mid-20th century, a period marked by sensational sightings and controversial incidents. The 1950’s George Adamski encounter, the moon landing of the ’60s, and the chilling cattle mutilations of the 1970s are recounted with a balanced mix of skepticism and wonder. He also documents the secretive Majestic 12 of the 1980s, a purported secret group of high-level government officials and scientists that made a treaty with Gray aliens. Furek’s ability to present both sides of the story — believers and skeptics alike — adds depth to these tales.

Part Four propels readers into the late 20th and early 21st centuries, where the lines between science fiction and reality blur. From the 1990s, yet another decade of weird anomalies, to the ufology universe expanding into the 2000s, Furek’s narrative culminates in the 2023 U.S. Congressional UFO hearings and the shocking revelations of alien corpses presented to the Congress of Mexico. His engagement with contemporary political figures such as Senator Marco Rubio and Rep. Anna Paulina Luna underscores the ongoing significance and controversy surrounding UFO investigations.

Flying Saucer Esoteric is more than a historical account; it is a reflective exploration of humanity’s enduring fascination with the unknown. Furek’s scholarly yet accessible writing style ensures that both seasoned UFO enthusiasts and newcomers to the field will find this book invaluable. Every serious student of ufology will want this comprehensive volume in their collection, as it not only documents significant events, but also challenges readers to consider the broader implications of our search for extraterrestrial life.

In a field often clouded by hoaxes and sensationalism, Furek’s meticulous research and balanced perspective make Flying Saucer Esoteric a standout work. It is a testament to his dedication and a significant contribution to the ever-evolving discourse on UFOs and the paranormal. ♦

Flying Saucer Esoteric* unveils a mesmerizing series of events that have become ingrained in our collective psyche. This book blends the extraordinary stories of contactees, abductees, space travelers, and even hoaxers, creating a vibrant and diverse tapestry that enriches the field of ufology.

BILL SLEVIN'S QUEST TO EXPLORE AND EDUCATE

By Cheryl Knight-Wilson

With a career in paranormal investigation spanning over 35 years, Bill Slevin has dedicated his life to exploring the unknown, conducting close to a thousand residential investigations. As the founder and lead paranormal investigator of the Paranormal Existence Research Society (P.E.R.S.), based in Coral Springs, Florida, he has developed a reputation for his methodical and empathetic approach to the paranormal, helping hundreds of people navigate their experiences with the supernatural.

Bill's knowledge and experience have earned him a Ph.D. in parapsychology and metaphysical humanistic science, solidifying his position as a respected parapsychologist and educator. His journey into the paranormal began at a young age when he started experiencing inexplicable phenomena. His curiosity only grew after a life-altering encounter during his first residential investigation in 1989, involving a rare demonic attack.

Rather than being deterred, Bill's resolve strengthened, leading him to study various fields such as metaphysics, quantum physics, and demonology. His comprehensive understanding of both scientific principles and metaphysical theories allows him to approach investigations with a balanced perspective, ensuring that all possible explanations are considered before concluding that an event is paranormal.

In addition to his investigative work, Bill is a sought-after educator and speaker, traveling the country to share his insights at conventions, schools, libraries, and more. His engaging lectures not only entertain, but also educate audiences on the realities of the paranormal, debunking myths and providing practical advice for aspiring investigators. His commitment to truth and education sets him apart in a field often clouded by sensationalism and misinformation.

Bill's expertise extends beyond the paranormal; his background in technology and IT enhances his ability to

With a career in paranormal investigation spanning more than 35 years, Bill Slevin has dedicated his life to exploring the unknown, conducting close to a thousand residential investigations. His journey into the paranormal began at a young age when he started experiencing inexplicable phenomena.

In 2013, Bill founded the Paranormal Existence Research Society (P.E.R.S.) to help people experiencing possible paranormal activity and to educate the public.

analyze evidence critically, distinguishing between natural and supernatural occurrences. Bill recently talked with Paranormal Underground magazine about his experiences, insights, and advice.

Q: How did your early experiences with the paranormal shape your career as an investigator and researcher?

Bill: Some of the experiences I had at an early age were very confusing to understand but also helped me to not fear the unknown and to learn more about it. My research, education, and training from when I was young has helped define me as a researcher and investigator. Without the paranormal being all over the TV and the internet, I had to really research and find the limited books and information out there, but the benefit was that the information you found was legit and not overdone for entertainment.

Growing up in the 1970s and '80s was very different to the present day when it comes to trying to learn about the paranormal and understanding any experiences you were having. There were not many people to talk to about what you were experiencing and not many places you could look up information to help you understand what you were experiencing. You were considered crazy if you said you had a paranormal experience and maybe even more crazy if you said you were trying to investigate paranormal claims.

Back when we didn't have all of the gadgets we have now and being able to utilize our senses a little more helped us connect on more of a spiritual level. Don't get me wrong, I love the equipment we have now, but there was something different about investigating back then. A few years ago, I lost a great friend, mentor, and investigator, Tim Yancey, and he always said, "When investigating, you don't need all these blinky lights. Take off your shoes, turn out the lights, and just feel and connect to the location."

Q: Can you describe in detail the life-altering experience during your first residential investigation in 1989 that involved a rare demonic attack?

Bill: I was so excited to finally go on a residential case. A friend contacted me and said he knew someone that was looking for an extra person for a case since one of his team members was sick. At the time, I did not know much about protection, demons, or anything like that. I just wanted to get on a residential case.

The two people I went to the case with didn't know much about what exactly was going on yet; they just said the old lady who lived there was frightened and was experiencing things moving, bad smells, and basic paranormal claims. I did not have equipment yet, except for a recorder, and the other two had a video camera — one of those bigger shoulder cameras we had back in the '80s — and tape recorder and microphone.

The three of us went into the house, and the minute we stepped in the entry way, we all turned around and ran outside. We were all nauseous and almost throwing up. We had no idea what had just happened; this was a first for all of us.

We gathered ourselves for a few minutes and went back in. This time nothing happened, and we were not smelling anything either, so my skeptical side was thinking carbon monoxide or something like that. We went straight ahead into the living room, and we there for not even 10 minutes when the guy to my right screamed louder than I have ever heard and threw his video camera to the floor, lens first. We hit the lights, and he was pulling at his shirt. When he took it off, there were three razor-like scratch marks from his neck to the bottom of his spine, bleeding. None of us knew what to say or think; we were all stunned. We got our stuff and immediately left the house.

Bill's lectures not only entertain, but also educate audiences on the realities of the paranormal, debunking myths and providing practical advice for aspiring investigators.

They told the owner to try and stay with friends or family for a couple nights until they could get someone that could come and help from the church. The team got the help of a priest and was able to remove the demon from the home. The team never did a case again after that. It scared them too much, and they were afraid of bringing anything home to their families. Unfortunately, I was not invited back when they went with the priest, as their other teammate was no longer sick.

This is why I feel this was a calling for me. Most people would have run and never done this again, but not me. I will never say I wasn't scared. I was frightened out of my mind at the time, and it will forever haunt me. But I left there with so many more questions. Why did it attack him; why not me or the other investigator? What was it trying to do? What did this poor, old lady do to have this? Just so many questions, which led me into my journey to learn as much as I could about the paranormal.

It wasn't until years later that I even learned about the way demons scratch, which matched up to his attack: three razor-like scratches. I never look forward to possible demonic cases, but I do them to help people. I will never be able to forget anything that happened on the demonic cases I was a part of.

I will say one last thing, this was 1989. If this was today and I was at a case with people I did not know well, I don't know if I would have believed it. I would have to think it was for fame and followers, but back then there was no fame or followers. The investigator who was scratched wouldn't even go to the hospital because he didn't want anyone to know. This was very real.

Q: What inspired you to found the Paranormal Existence Research Society (P.E.R.S.), and what are your main goals with the group?

Bill: Over the years, I had bounced from team to team throughout New Jersey and Florida, and I always found myself getting very frustrated with many of the teams. This is not to say anything bad about any of them that I was part of, but most of them just had different agendas and beliefs than I did. I will always and forever be grateful for the teams I was part of for giving me the opportunity back then, but I just never felt a great connection to any of these teams.

Around 2013, I decided it was time to look into starting my own team and find people who had the same passion I did to help people, the understanding that not everything is paranormal, and the ability to keep learning and help educate the public. My main goal was always to try and help people who were experiencing possible paranormal activity.

Of course, I love to go out and do public investigations and research, but my calling was definitely to help people and also to help educate.

I originally wanted a small but amazing team of people. I started out with a few friends the first couple of years, until they moved out of state and I was back to square one trying to decide how to form this team. So, I put the word out that I was looking for members, I received so many applications and still do weekly. I am very picky and take my time to vet the people applying to be part of the team. I do not care if you have 30 years of experience or no experience at all.

I care about your passion to help people and your compassionate nature, which is what is needed when dealing with real people and residential cases. I can teach people to investigate, but I can't teach you how to be a kind and caring person.

I now have the most amazing group of people I consider family and could not be happier. The P.E.R.S. team has grown more than I expected at first and currently has members all throughout Florida, Georgia, and New England, as well as internationally in the U.K., Italy, and Greece. My team understands what is out there and how to first look for the logical explanations. Many of them are extremely gifted in many different areas in and out of the paranormal. My wife is also now part of the team, and while she does not investigate, she is an energy worker and healer.

Bill was featured in the documentary The Devil's Academy, which explores the mass possession event at the Miami Aerospace Academy in 1979.

Q: As an empath, how do your abilities influence your approach to paranormal investigations?

Bill: I do feel my empath abilities help me when I am on location at a case. The way my abilities work is I can feel energy and emotions of both the living and the dead. So, there are two ways this helps me on an investigation. One is I like to walk the entire location and see what I feel in each room before I know where the experiences happened to see if I can match them up when we hear from the client about their experiences and where they were.

Second, I can also feel the emotions of the client and usually I can tell a few things: if they are maybe lying or scared, and also if they are not telling us everything. One example would be a case I had with a very nice family, but when we sat down with them for hours to hear everything and ask some very personal questions, the wife told us she had no medical conditions and was not on medication for anything, but I could feel that she was suffering from something. I could feel her pain and emotion.

By the end of the night, the wife felt comfortable enough to tell one of my female team members about all the medical conditions she had and all the medication she was on for it. While I'm not saying this was the problem, this is information that is very important for use to know in order to help. I do not take my abilities to always be 100% spot-on accurate — no one is — but they come in handy to help in many ways and match to what we are told or what our equipment says.

Q: You hold a Ph.D. in parapsychology and metaphysical humanistic science. How has your academic background contributed to your work in the paranormal field?

Bill: I have always wanted to learn as much as I can in and out of the paranormal field. Just having these degrees does not mean I am better than everyone or I know everything. It just means I have taken the time to go out and learn. No one knows everything in any field. These degrees have helped me tremendously in understanding a little more of what could be paranormal and what may be natural scientific causes.

I have also learned a lot about human nature and parapsychology that you would not learn just on investigations. Learning as much as possible in this field will always be a benefit if you want to get the most accurate evidence you can. Having a 33-year background in technology as an IT director gives me a lot of education and experience with electronics, equipment, software, apps, CCTV cameras, etc. It helps give me a better understanding of how these things work, including false positives and things that can cause the devices to fail and be contaminated. Learning a lot about photography can greatly help you understand captured evidence also.

Q: Can you discuss some of the most challenging cases you've encountered involving demonic activity?

Bill: Any case that is deemed demonic is challenging and very frightening. As a demonologist, I have been studying demonology and assessing cases for more than 30 years, and it never gets any easier. Demons can be very devious and manipulative and will do their best to act like normal ghosts to avoid being noticed by people who do not know how to tell the difference.

It can also be very challenging sometimes to recognize when you are dealing with a demon or a psychiatric illness — and in some cases both. These things can mimic each other very accurately. But, the most challenging cases are not the demonic ones. Yes, they may be the most frightening and dangerous, but the most challenging are the ones with the client who will not accept they are not haunted.

I have more trouble explaining to a person after two or three times at their location that there is nothing in there, but because they have seen the same things on TV, they know they are haunted or possessed. These are the most difficult because they look at the TV shows as the experts in the field, and if they saw something on TV it has to be real. We deal with this a lot.

Q: What are some common misconceptions about the paranormal that you aim to correct through your educational lectures and presentations?

Bill: My main goal is to try and help educate the public about the difference between what could be paranormal and what is being shown for entertainment. The most common misconception is “orbs.” These are the easiest things to capture on film, so everyone that takes a photo or video is likely to capture these “orbs” and think that have a ghost.

The problem is most do not want to listen and learn about what those really are and how they are caused by airborne contamination and their cameras IR lights or flash reflecting off the airborne particles to create these “orbs.” They just want to have their “ghost photo.” True spirit orbs are real, but they are very different and very rare and seen with your eyes not on film. I do not know one person in the field to ever capture a real spirit orb on film. I have seen three in my 35 years in the field.

The other main misconception is that everything is a demon, and demons are everywhere. This is not true. Being a demonologist and brought in to assess cases, I can tell you that demons do exist but they are very rare.

I love to be able to entertain a bit when I am speaking and lecturing, but my main goal is definitely to help educate, whether you are just a paranormal enthusiast wanting to learn more about it or someone maybe interested in being an investigator, I hope that my lectures will guide you on the correct path to understanding.

Q: Tell us about The Devil's Academy and what it was like being featured on such a prominent platform?

Bill: When I was contacted, all I knew is that they wanted me for my education and experience with demons and demonology. They said it was a show that was hopefully going to be a Shock Doc for Discovery, so I was excited to be part of something like this.

They asked if I know anything about what happened at the Miami Aero Space Academy back in 1979. I told them I did know a bit about it, and they asked if I would like to be in the documentary about the event. I went down to Miami for the filming and spent a good portion of the day there. I was nervous but had fun and, of course, thought of many more things I could have said on the ride home!

When the show finally came out, they did change around a lot of the show and added additional people, but I did like the way they put it together and feel honored to have been asked to be part of it. After it was released, I started to get all kinds of messages and friend requests from all over the world with very kind words from people, which is always nice to hear.

If you have not seen this show yet, I definitely recommend it. It is a documentary telling all about the events in 1979 at the Miami Aerospace academy in Miami, where it is believed that there was a mass possession of the school. There are many things that can be believed, such as it was just the kids acting out because they were very abused and oppressed at the school, but also a lot of accounts that cannot be explained and lean more toward the paranormal and the demonic.

Q: What advice would you give to aspiring paranormal investigators regarding the importance of debunking and scientific rigor?

Bill: Make a decision: Are you in this field to have fun and do public investigations, or are you wanting to help people with residential investigations and help further the field with real research? If you do feel you want to help people and do research, then please go and find people who have been doing this for a while and get training from them, learn as much as you can about the paranormal and outside the paranormal.

Understanding what can be explained logically will not only help you with your clients, but will help you to know when you have captured something real. It is more important and exciting to get that one great capture than to have 100 captures that you think are real but can really be explained. Read every book out there on the subject; every book will give you some piece of knowledge you never thought of or considered.

You can always reach out to me. I love to help guide people in the right direction with some advice, book recommendations, etc.

If you are not looking to help people, that is fine. I still encourage you to go investigate, but stick to public locations and have fun with it. Just learn a bit about protection, because even just going out to have fun at a public location doesn't mean you are immune to attachments and attacks.

Q: What would our readers be most surprised to find out about you?

Bill: If you have seen me speak or watched a podcast I was on, I am sure you would be surprised to know I have always been terrified of public speaking. I never liked it growing up. I refused to do it in school. I always took the zero instead of getting up in front of people, even if they were all friends and family.

But I do love talking about the paranormal, which has helped me over the years get more used to it, especially speaking at some events with 500+ people in the room.

I remember my first show at a library. The day of the show I freaked out. I couldn't understand why I would do this when I do not like speaking in front of a crowd, and I almost left and didn't do the show. Once I decided to stay, I was a little lost when I started but managed to get my grips and get through it. I still get nervous, but I have gotten much better. Once I get past introducing myself, I usually calm down. I do not like talking about myself to a crowd!

Q: What future projects or research are you most excited about in the field of paranormal investigation?

Bill: We have so much technology out there. I am just hoping one day we will have some new technology that will be more authentic and precise in helping capture real evidence, not just to capture it but to help advance this field and make it a little more acceptable with some real scientific evidence.

Being in a field with no clear-cut, 100% evidence is very tough, and there is so much out there that we need to learn and that no one even knows about yet, it would be a shame to just see the paranormal field fail and just turn into only entertainment and not research and helping people.

I teach my team that we are researchers before anything.

Q: Is there anything else our readers should know about you and your work in the paranormal field?

Bill: Even though I have been on TV and I am seen as a celebrity guest at many conventions, libraries, schools, etc., I am more known for my work in residential and demonic cases.

My main goals were always to help people, try and help advance this field, and also to try and help educate the public about the paranormal once I had enough education and experience to do so.

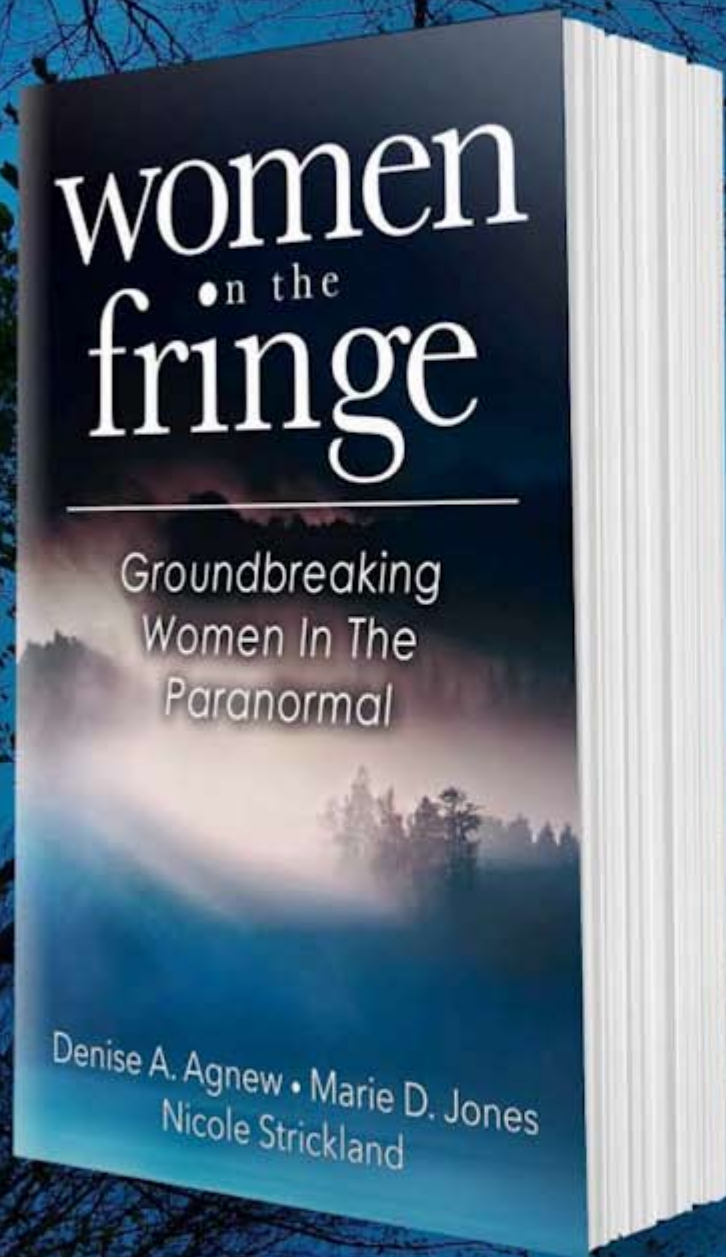

One of the things I love about doing conventions and speaking is meeting the people who come to talk with me and learn about the paranormal. Also, more people in this field should put aside their differences and work together. I have many teams all over the U.S. that I work with. This is not a competition.

We learn a lot from each other all the time, and it is always best to ask for help when you are not sure what to do, better to ask for help then cause more of a problem.

LIFE BEYOND EARTH

INSIGHTS INTO THE AFTERLIFE

By David Drew

From my unusual perspective of remembering my time in the spirit world, I am often asked what life is like on the other side. There is no simple answer, as there are many planes of existence. The way you have lived your life determines which will be your home.

It is an age-old concept. If you have lived a spiritual life, you will go to a higher plane, but no matter where you find yourself, you can earn the opportunity to progress to higher levels.

The planes are not truly above or below us, but dimensions apart — on different vibrations, like radio channels. When you are tuned into one station, you generally can't hear the others (unless you are a medium).

Going up through the planes, so to speak, each is a more spiritual place than the last. On the first level, people's minds tend toward the material. They may live in houses and wear clothing, much the same as they did on Earth. These things are created by the very real power of thought.

As you progress to the high spirit planes, people have a greater understanding. They no longer feel they need material possessions, and rather than clothing, they are adorned in brightly colored robes, which consist of radiant light rather than physical material.

It is hard to understand that time and distance are very different in these worlds. We measure time by the planets in our Universe. In other dimensions, you can travel great distances in an instant, all with the power of thought.

All things must have an opposite. If you can be promoted from the Earth to higher planes, you may also be demoted to the dark, gray pits! It is surprising how many people descend into this miserable realm.

The spirit levels range from materialistic lower planes to the enlightened higher planes. They reflect the spiritual evolution of individuals, where each level corresponds to the vibrational frequency and understanding of its inhabitants.

Here, those who have lived selfish lives reap the effects of their actions. Some people prefer it here, like a burglar prefers the dark. Their sinful lives drag them further down. Others are filled with the bitter torture of remorse. They regret their actions and may eventually earn the right to once more touch the Earth and spiritually advance.

There are people here who you would think did not lead a bad life, but apart from what you do, you are also judged on what you didn't do. All your words and actions are apparent for all to see.

Earth is unique in that we share it with people who have come here from different planes. On every other plane, people share a similar level of spirituality. There are those whose previous existence was in the pits and those who were relatively high in the spirit world.

When your life is analyzed, every mistake, careless deed, and misplaced word will weigh you down like a brick around your neck. Each selfless action to help others will act like a balloon to help raise you up.

Think about this for a moment. When your time comes, will you have more bricks or balloons? ♦

THE LIFE OF A PSYCHIC'S WIFE

BY JANE DREW

As someone sat on the bed by my feet, it took a moment to register that something was off. Suddenly wide awake, I realized my new husband was asleep at my side and there was no one else in the house.

"David!" I hissed. "Who's sitting on the bed?"

"I don't know," he mumbled. "I'm asleep! They would have me working day and night if I let them."

This was my first night as wife of spiritual medium David Drew. This new life was going to require some adjustment. However, I had chosen this strange path. It occurred to me my darling husband had not.

David was born hardwired with a connection to the worlds of spirit. As a little boy in 1950's British West Midlands, he played with children no one else could see. Aunties long-dead pushed him on swings, and he instinctively knew when estranged relatives were about to visit.

It broke his mother's heart when the stillborn sister he knew nothing about came to him one night and introduced herself by name. It was a lot for a little boy. Given a choice, he would probably have preferred an ordinary life, where his friends didn't think he was different and his family lost no sleep over his behavior.

We get what we are given in this world — as surely as we get what we deserve in the next.

"Psychic gifts" is a strange term. David can't see anything for himself, and the emotional strain almost outweighs the rewards. The comfort brought to a bereaved mother temporarily reunited with her lost child leaves an aftertaste of regret. Although he has proven they live on, he can't reverse their loss.

Recharging his batteries is necessary but not easy. On a night out, someone in spirit will indicate some person, asking that David pass on a message. He won't do this. It isn't appropriate to approach people unsolicited. As well as those asking for help, David is surrounded by spirit helpers, as well as earthbound entities. Clearing haunted houses is all part of his day's work.

I am accustomed now to spirit visitors opening wardrobe doors or peeping around corners. I wasn't even phased when we moved into a house where there had been murders ... and later a haunted pub where the landlord had slit his throat.

They are all just people, and I try to support David in his work as he stands on a bridge between their world and ours. ♦

OKLAHOMA'S BERMUDA TRIANGLE

MYSTERIES OF BEAVER DUNES PARK

BY PAUL DALE ROBERTS, HALO PARANORMAL INVESTIGATIONS

My uncle, George Roberts, was born and raised in the town of Lehigh, Oklahoma. As a little boy, he heard many stories about Beaver Dunes Park in Beaver County, Oklahoma. George says that this place is also known as “Oklahoma’s Bermuda Triangle” or the “Shaman’s Portal” as a result of all the mysterious disappearances that have occurred there over the years.

Legend has it that Spanish explorers witnessed their friends vanishing into flashes of green light in the 1500s. The native Americans warned the Spanish explorers to stay out of this forbidden area, but the explorers didn’t listen. Some of those explorers disappeared, never to be seen again.

Locals say there is a portal and people are transported to an alternate dimension within the dunes.

Spanish explorer Francisco Vázquez de Coronado’s journal cites three of his men disappearing into flashes of green light while exploring the land. Locals also mention that a UFO once crashed in this area.

Beaver Dunes Park is a lot like the Zone of Silence in Mexico. George says when he visited this park, he did see green flashing lights off in the distance. He avoided the lights, not wanting to become another missing person.

Mystery in the Dunes: Paranormal Portals

Paranormal experimenter Jonathan Willows believes that the portal at Beaver Dunes Park must extend to Provincetown, MA, because the Black Flash (aka the “Devil of the Dunes” and “Provincetown Phantom”) came through the portal and was wandering around Beaver Dunes Park. Provincetown and Beaver Dunes Park both have dunes, and Jonathan — who once lived in Massachusetts — says that he encountered a giant about 10 feet tall during his visit to Beaver Dunes Park.

The giant, who was dressed all in black and had piercing blue eyes, leaped down from a tree and startled Jonathan. Jonathan’s story is similar to a girl named Miss Costa.

Miss Costa says: “On one October night, I was walking by the Town Hall and from out of the bushes an inhumanly tall figure dressed all in black jumped out in front of me. He had glowing blue eyes, big silver ears, and the ability to jump like a gazelle.”

Jonathan said that the creature he encountered took several long leaps and then vanished, as he related this story to my uncle George.

When George visited the park, he met Edward Steiner from Pierre, South Dakota. Edward said there is definitely a portal at Beaver Dunes Park, because he either saw an eight-foot shadow person or he came across Walking Sam, who is a local legend in South Dakota. Walking Sam reportedly lives in the caverns of Wind Cave National Park and comes out at night to scare people. Legend has it that he collects souls.

But, here we go again, we have a strange cryptid from another park that may be teleporting from Wind Cave National Park to Beaver Dunes Park via a wormhole or portal.

Native Legends, Cryptids, and UFO Encounters

Some Native Americans from the Beaver Dunes Park area also believe that the portal sends over a cryptid called the Miniwashitu, which can be found in North Dakota. A native American tribesman at Beaver Dunes Park was said to have gone crazy when he encountered the Miniwashitu. He had a severe nervous breakdown and passed out. After a week, he was back to normal.

Oklahoma native Americans report that the Miniwashitu is a dreadful beast. Descriptions say that it has red hair like a buffalo and one eye like a cyclops. That one eye is centered on its forehead, and above its eye, a horn sticks out. Its backbone stands out, because it is notched and jagged like an enormous saw.

From all of the stories about Beaver Dunes Park, I would say this place needs a thorough scientific investigation. I believe that portals or wormholes are located all over this world and may be the root cause of many human disappearances.

Beaver Dunes Park is also a hotbed of UFO activity. Some hikers have encountered wild animals that look like they were operated on with a laser. This is truly a place of high strangeness. ♦

THE DULCE INCIDENT

Unveiling the Secret War Beneath New Mexico

By Chad Wilson

Phil Schneider's chilling account of a deadly confrontation with extraterrestrial beings beneath the Earth's surface at a military base beneath Dulce, New Mexico, has sparked widespread intrigue and controversy, raising profound questions about hidden government operations and the possibility of alien collaboration.

Schneider, a geologist and engineer who worked for the U.S. government, became widely known for his claims about a seven-story, secret underground base in Dulce. He alleged that in 1979, he was involved in the construction of a Deep Underground Military Base (D.U.M.B.) near Dulce, where he experienced a violent confrontation with extraterrestrial beings.

A Clash Beneath the Earth

During the construction project in 1979, Schneider's team, which included both engineers and military personnel, began the task of drilling into the Earth to create extensive tunnels and underground facilities. During drilling, the team accidentally breached a large cavern located under Archuleta Mesa on the Jicarilla Apache Indian Reservation.

Initially, this cavern appeared to be an empty space that could potentially be used for storage or additional infrastructure. As Schneider and his team explored the cavern, they encountered an unforeseen and startling situation: They came face-to-face with what he claimed were extraterrestrial beings. These beings were described by Schneider as tall, gray-skinned, and hostile.

A violent confrontation ensued. The clash was deadly, with Schneider claiming that the lives of 60 soldiers were lost, along with numerous alien casualties. Schneider himself sustained severe injuries, including a chest scar and the loss of several fingers, which he attributed to an alien beam weapon. Following this harrowing encounter, Schneider was debriefed and ordered to keep the incident confidential.

After the Dulce incident, Schneider became a vocal critic of the government's alleged efforts to hide the truth about the underground base and its extraterrestrial inhabitants. He spent years traveling and giving lectures, revealing what he claimed to be undeniable evidence of secretive operations involving alien species.

Schneider presented photographs, X-rays of his injuries, and other documentation to substantiate his shocking claims. He argued that the public deserved to know the truth about these clandestine activities.

A Mysterious Death: The Silencing of Phil Schneider

In January 1996, Schneider died under suspicious circumstances. Officially ruled as a suicide, many of his supporters believe he was murdered to silence his outspoken allegations. They point to the unusual method of his death — strangulation by a catheter tube — and his prior warnings about threats to his life as evidence of foul play.

Schneider's untimely death only fueled further speculation and intrigue, solidifying his place in the annals of UFO lore and conspiracy theories. Schneider's accounts remain a significant part of UFO lore and conspiracy theories surrounding government secrecy and alien interactions.

While his claims are highly controversial and widely debated, they have contributed to the ongoing discussions about the possibility of hidden extraterrestrial activities and underground bases.

Schneider's story continues to captivate those interested in ufology and conspiracy theories, raising questions about what the government might be hiding regarding extraterrestrial life and advanced technologies. ♦

The Mysteries of D.U.M.B.s

Deep Underground Military Bases, known as D.U.M.B.s, refer to secret, subterranean facilities purportedly built and operated by the government. These bases are the subject of numerous conspiracy theories and are often described as highly secure and sophisticated, with various alleged purposes.

D.U.M.B.s are the subject of numerous conspiracy theories, which propose various covert functions for these subterranean facilities. Some theories suggest D.U.M.B.s are used for advanced military operations, including the development and storage of cutting-edge weapons and technology.

Others believe these bases facilitate cooperation between the government and extraterrestrial beings, allowing for joint research and technology exchange. D.U.M.B.s are also rumored to serve as emergency bunkers for government and military officials during catastrophic events, such as nuclear war or natural disasters.

Allegedly, these bases are located miles beneath the surface, connected by extensive tunnel networks, and equipped with vast infrastructure, including living quarters, laboratories, and storage facilities. Theories also claim that D.U.M.B.s house advanced technologies far beyond public knowledge, such as energy weapons, anti-gravity devices, and advanced medical technology. ♦

THE MYSTERIOUS LORE OF DRAGONS

By Corey Sharer

The legend of dragons has captivated human imagination for millennia, manifesting in various cultures across the globe. These mythical creatures, often depicted as large, serpentine, and capable of flight and fire-breathing, have sparked curiosity and debate among scholars, scientists, and enthusiasts alike.

While the existence of dragons as described in folklore is widely regarded as fictional, exploring their origins and the possibility of real-life inspirations offers intriguing insights into human history and the natural world.

Origins of the Dragon Myth

Dragons appear in the mythologies of many ancient civilizations. In Chinese culture, dragons are revered as benevolent beings associated with power, strength, and good fortune. Conversely, in Western mythology, dragons are often portrayed as malevolent creatures, guardians of treasures, or embodiments of chaos and destruction.

The similarities and differences in dragon myths across cultures suggest a shared fascination with these creatures, potentially arising from human encounters with large, mysterious animals or natural phenomena.

Possible Real-Life Inspirations

Several theories propose that dragon myths may have been inspired by real animals or fossil discoveries. One popular hypothesis is that ancient peoples might have stumbled upon dinosaur fossils and, unable to explain them with their current understanding of the world, created stories of dragons. The massive bones of dinosaurs such as Tyrannosaurus rex or the long-necked Sauropods could easily be imagined as belonging to dragon-like creatures.

Another possible inspiration for dragon myths could be large reptiles, such as crocodiles or the Komodo dragon, a species of monitor lizard native to Indonesia. The Komodo dragon, which can grow up to 10 feet in length and has a fearsome appearance, could have influenced local legends and spread through sailors' tales.

Pterosaurs and Flying Dragons

The concept of flying dragons might have been influenced by pterosaurs, prehistoric flying reptiles that coexisted with dinosaurs. Although there is no evidence that pterosaurs could breathe fire, their large wingspans and formidable appearances could have fueled stories of airborne dragons.

Pterosaurs such as Quetzalcoatlus, with wingspans reaching up to 36 feet, might have seemed dragon-like to those who discovered their fossils.

Mythological and Symbolic Roles

Dragons also play significant symbolic roles in various cultures, representing both good and evil.

In Chinese mythology, the dragon is a symbol of imperial power and cosmic energy, often associated with the emperor and the heavens.

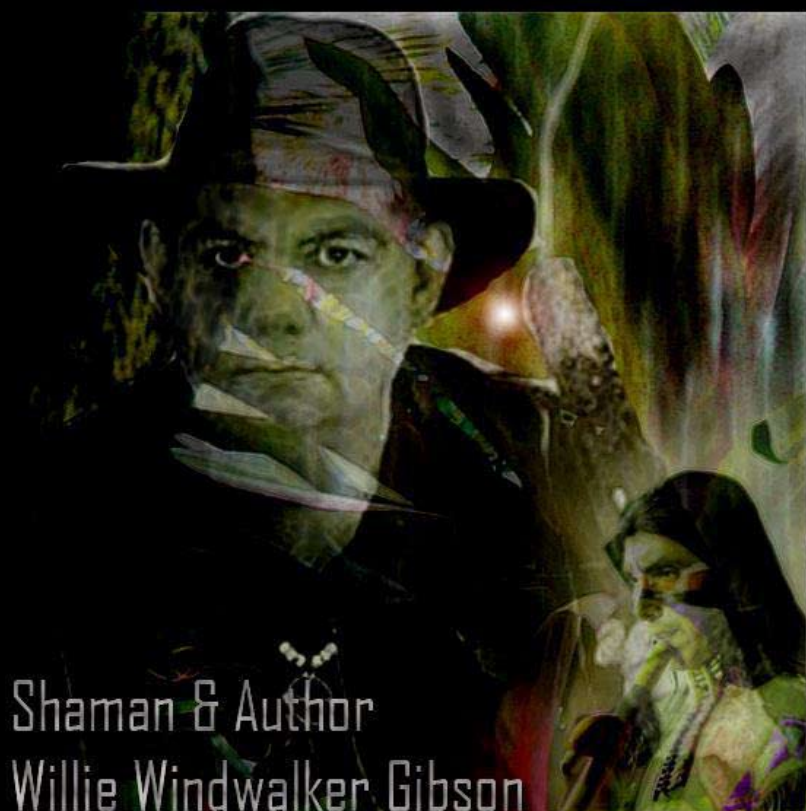

In contrast, European dragons are frequently depicted as evil beings that heroes must slay to protect their communities. This duality highlights the versatility of the dragon myth in expressing complex human emotions and societal values.

Scientific Perspective

From a scientific perspective, the existence of dragons as described in myths is implausible. No evidence supports the existence of creatures that can breathe fire or possess the anatomical features attributed to dragons. However, the fascination with dragons persists, fueled by their rich symbolism and the mysteries of the natural world.

While dragons as mythical creatures are unlikely to have ever existed, their legend is rooted in the human experience of awe and fear of the unknown. The convergence of fossil discoveries, encounters with real animals, and the symbolic power of dragons in storytelling has ensured their lasting presence in human culture.

Exploring the origins of dragon myths offers a fascinating glimpse into our ancestors' attempts to explain the world around them and the enduring power of imagination. ♦

WHISPERS FROM THE BATTLEFIELD GETTYSBURG'S BALADERRY INN & BEYOND

By Warren Gray

Situated in the heart of America's most haunted town, the Baladerry Inn is renowned for its paranormal activity.

The massive Battle of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, during the Civil War took place over three horrific days, from July 1st through July 3rd, 1863, resulting in a total of 7,058 soldiers killed, 33,264 wounded, and 10,790 missing in action, according to HistoryNet.com. It was the single bloodiest battle of the war, and the major turning point toward an eventual Union victory.

Positioned just one mile behind Union lines, toward the east, was the former George Bushman farm, then occupied by Bushman's son. The site includes a farmhouse built in 1812 and the rest of the main house, including the current kitchen, which was added in 1830.

Beginning on the second day of battle, the farmhouse was commandeered as a Union field hospital (Army of the Potomac), treating more than 1,200 Union and 125 Confederate soldiers, of which 52 Union soldiers and 41 Confederates died at the farm, according to the Tillie

Pierce House website. This was actually an astounding 96% survival rate for Union troops at the time, although only 67% for the Confederates.

In addition, Lewis Powell, a Confederate soldier treated there for a gunshot to the right wrist, later joined John Wilkes Booth in a conspiracy to assassinate President Lincoln, and he was executed by hanging on July 7, 1865.

A Civil War Hospital Turned Gettysburg Haunt

The original living room and dining room of the Inn served as a makeshift, surgical center for soldiers and civilians alike. Many of the wounded soldiers had damaged limbs amputated, mostly without the use of anesthesia. The surgery was extremely painful, and the screams of the patients could be heard throughout the hospital.

Dead bodies and severed limbs were buried hastily and anonymously, without proper rites, to help prevent disease and infection.

Accordingly, Gettysburg is currently home to the highest concentration of haunted places in America, and coming in at the Number Five position on the “Seven Most-Haunted Hotels in Gettysburg,” according to Haunted Rooms America, is the historic Baladerry Inn. It was also included among the “Seven Most-Haunted Places in Gettysburg: Search for the Supernatural,” by lovetoknow.com, in their 2021 “Lifestyle, Haunts and Hauntings” section.

There were additions made to the Bushman farmhouse in 1972, and the house was converted into a B&B in 1992, with more additions in 1994.

Just 60 yards southeast of the original, brick section of the main house was the principal burial site for the hospital, including the apparent remains of at least seven Confederate soldiers and countless amputated limbs. This area was later paved over and became tennis courts for a time, but they are no longer in use.

The present-day Baladerry Inn, located at 40 Hospital Road, has 10 well-decorated guest rooms, with five (Garden, Tulip, Primrose, Windflower, and Vines) in the main house and five more (Cottage Rose Suite, Rose, Daisy, Marigold, and Shamrock) in the nearby carriage house. Since June 2010, the property has been owned and managed by Kenny and Judy Caudill, the current innkeepers.

Ghostly Encounters and a Presidential Apparition

Guests at the Inn have reported seeing the ghosts of Confederate soldiers on the grounds, especially near the French-style doors of the Great Room, the gazebo, and former tennis courts. People have heard the cries and screams of wounded soldiers, ghostly music, and the sounds of musket fire and horses’ hooves stomping on the ground.

There is said to be an amorous ghost named Geoffrey, nicknamed “Lover Boy” by the staff, who frequents the Primrose Room upstairs and is fond of blonde-haired women. The Marigold Room in the carriage house has reports of a female apparition, often standing at the foot of the bed.

The Great Room at the Baladerry Inn features a loft area with a guest experience binder showcasing past paranormal encounters.

The Inn also has had numerous sightings of soldiers, nurses, and children roaming around the corridors at night. In fact, an FBI paranormal investigator actually saw the spirit of a portly woman in the kitchen.

Gettysburg is certainly full of fascinating ghost stories, and two of the most interesting occurred when Union Colonel Joshua Chamberlain and his 20th Maine Regiment had two separate, alleged sightings of George Washington on horseback. The first sighting was on the night before their timely arrival in Gettysburg. The second was at a time of day that was reportedly a very critical point in the battle, at about 7 p.m. on July 2, 1863. These dual events occurred less than 1.2 miles southwest of the George Bushman farm.

Soldiers on both sides definitely saw the tall, mysterious figure in an outdated uniform, later reporting the incident. The Confederates fired desperate volleys at this commanding and highly conspicuous figure, but he never fell from his white stallion. After the battle, there were wild rumors about the strange apparition and a formal investigation by Secretary of War Edwin Stanton, with many eyewitness testimonies.

Chamberlain and his soldiers all held fast to their sworn accounts, but no official conclusions were ever drawn. Later in his life, Joshua Chamberlain explained the two ghostly incidents this way: “We know not what mystical power may be possessed by those who are now bivouacking with the dead. I only know the effect, but I dare not explain or deny the cause. I do believe that we were enveloped by the power of the other world that day, and who shall say that Washington was not among the number of those who aided the country that he founded?"

(Source: The Inn's "Guest Sightings and Experiences" binder.)

Chamberlain was certainly a brilliant scholar and linguist (fluent in nine languages, other than English: Greek, Latin, Spanish, German, French, Italian, Arabic, Hebrew, and Syriac, a dialect of Aramaic, the native language of Jesus Christ), later a state governor, college president, lawyer, and highly decorated war hero, whose judgement and credibility were beyond question. Whatever he and his men, and even the Confederates, saw in battle at Little Round Top was something that convinced even this exceptionally courageous officer to write that, "I dare not explain or deny the cause."

Bridge Whispers and Inn Voices

During our own trip to Gettysburg on May 29, 2024, our first stop was at the historic Sachs Covered Bridge, where three Confederate deserters were hanged from the overhead rafters during the battle. This bridge is reportedly the Number One most-haunted spot in Gettysburg. There was an abundance of tourists and noise when we were there, but at exactly 2:30 p.m., we had a very brief moment of total silence and did a quiet, two-minute, EVP session before anyone else arrived.

When I inquired, "Were you a Confederate soldier?" using my Olympus VN-7200 digital voice recorder and K-II Meter, there was an instant and distinct response of "Yes" on the DVR playback, which my wife and I both heard before departing from the bridge area.

When we replayed the EVP later, it resulted in a "Lo-Batt" reading, meaning low battery power. This is common in many paranormal incidents, when a spirit drains any available electrical power in order to manifest itself very briefly for long enough to reply to a question.

Next, we proceeded to the quiet Baladerry Inn, recently ranked as "#3 of 23 B&Bs in Gettysburg" by TripAdvisor.com, on 3.7 acres of land, where we had reserved the Garden Room, on the ground floor, in the newer section of the main house.

Upstairs in the loft area of the nearby Great Room, there was a binder detailing "Guest Sightings and Experiences" from 2005 to 2009, before the new owners acquired the Inn. This included a number of strange photos by past guests, including three pictured in this article, showing a black shadowy mass hovering above a sleeping woman, and ghostly white shapes outdoors.

We initially had no paranormal experiences; however, on Thursday morning, May 30, 2024, while waiting for breakfast to be served in the adjoining Great Room, we held a brief EVP session at 7:17 a.m. in our room. The results were surprising:

Me: "Are you a soldier?"

EVP: "Huh" (very obvious, quick, and breathy)

Me: "Did you die in the hospital?"

EVP: "No" (very soft and muted)

The EVP replies weren't flashy, dramatic, or scary at all, but they were there, so we were clearly not alone in the room, even though it was part of a newer addition to the Inn in 1994 and was not part of the original house or field hospital area. Yet, even in broad daylight, it was still on the grounds of the original farmhouse.

Overall, our short trip to Gettysburg was quite enjoyable and successful, obtaining clear, EVP responses at both the Sachs Covered Bridge and the Baladerry Inn. It was a peaceful and quiet setting in the present day, but was certainly loud and chaotic during the raging battle in 1863.

The Baladerry Inn continues to be a notable center of paranormal activity, its reputation for ghostly encounters persisting through the decades. ♦

WANDERING WILTSHIRE A CROP CIRCLE ROAD TRIP

BY RICHARD ROKEBY

As I drive up Hackpen Hill (England), I notice how the Wiltshire countryside has a lumpiness all of its own. There is no doubt due to the chalk underlay that is just below its lush green surface. Even with the heavy, dark rain clouds as a backdrop, there are still patches of sunlight reflecting off the ground.

My van slowly winds its way up, gears churning, to the top of the hill. We are met by a collection of vehicles that seem to be waiting for something. The purpose of my trip to Hackpen Hill, and indeed my road trip as a whole, is to look for crop circles. I had it on good authority, UKcrop-circles.co.uk, that a circle was discovered here on July 5th, and I was on its trail.

We park the van, and myself and my rather reluctant teenage son assess the scene. Are the collection of other cars and vans here for the same thing? It soon becomes apparent that they are not, and the group is a mixed bag of girls feeding their horses and people on lunch breaks, safe and warm in their vehicles against the steadily falling rain. Undeterred, we decide to have a look around.

Hackpen Hill is one of the tallest hills in Wiltshire, and its broad slopes face northeast. There is a small Neolithic white horse etched into the chalk on the hill's easterly slope, and we walk down the hill in that direction. I can just about make out the shape and form of the white horse with its extended head and legs as if in motion. Two local wild looking horses seem to take exception to us bothering their ancient "God" and buck and snort as we approach it.

I look out at the view. The rain clouds have lifted and the luminous landscape spreads out in front of us. There are no crop circles, but what can be seen is a vast blank canvas of land with its green and yellow fields just waiting to be used for communication. It occurs to me that when looked at from above, why would you not use this natural medium as a message board?!

A Window to Another World?

Crop circles can be dated back to the 16th century at least. But maybe the medium had been used for thousands of years, and this is why ancient man felt the need to draw pictures in the chalk? Perhaps to communicate back to the skies?

There were no crop circles here, but I had found something more important: I had found the vast potential for them.

We drive into Avebury village, keenly looking for signs of a reported crop circle again from the website. Other than the awesome ring of Neolithic stones that surrounds the village, there is nothing unusual to note.

My first shouts of excitement are soon dashed when I release what I see in a field is the turning circle left by a tractor. We turn off from the village, past the shops selling pentagram necklaces and tie dye scarves, and drive down Green Street. Just before we disappear under a canopy of trees, I see a group of people standing in a wheat field looking intently to the ground and then to the sky. I notice that a steady stream of people, bedecked in pentagram charms and tie dye T-shirts, are crossing into the field and going to the same area.

It is difficult to tell from the van, but I feel sure we had found a crop circle. We park the van and walk into the field. There is a sense of joy as we realize we found a crop circle!

We thread our way through the tracks left by the farm machinery to an area about the size of a tennis court. It is a bit like finding your way through a maze. The wheat sheaves are flattened in some areas and left in place in others to create the clear shapes of triangles and squares, forming a geometric pattern.

As I walk into this artificially created space, I feel as if I'm entering a separate domain from the rest of the field. I sense a different energy and atmosphere. I decide to test this theory — I brought with me some copper dowsing rods. Starting at the outside edge of the circle, which is actually more like an oval, I start to walk in deliberate steps around the structure.

If you have ever done any dowsing, you will be aware that contrary to your reason you can feel an external force pushing on the rods. Then, as I approach an intersection of flattened wheat, the dowsing rods automatically crossed. At other times, they go crazy, the copper rods spinning or forming straight lines — one pointing in each direction directly north and south.

My teenage son looks on with the sort of cynicism only a teenager can produce.

"Give it a go," I say, and got the expected raised eyebrow of "you are kidding, right" in return. "Go on," I say. So, he takes the rods and, after losing his self-consciousness, starts to walk around. I hear a "Whoaa!" and see a small smile appear on his slightly bemused-looking face.

"Weird, isn't it?" I say. I see the rods moving in his hand. "Try an intersection?" I suggest.

This he does, with the same result I had. The rods cross exactly as the two pathways of flattened sheaves crossed.

"Wait a minute," he says, as he walks out of the circle into the field itself. Walking around 20 meters, the rods stay parallel. Coming back into the crop circle, I hear the universal teenage word of approval, "Cool," and I know he is, if not convinced, intrigued.

Fact, Fiction, or Something Else Entirely?

Within the circle are other people. A family group has set up a picnic in the middle of the structure and seems to be breaking off periodically to stand, hold hands, and murmur softly and rhythmically to themselves.

There is also another character. A tall, slim man. He is six-foot plus, wearing a black cord-peaked cap, a long beige raincoat, and a patterned waistcoat over the top of

it. He has black faded jeans and combat boots. A black canvas bag is slung low from his shoulder. He crouches down, looking at the ground, examining the bent sheaves. Then he looks at the distant horizon. He looks like someone who knows his way around a crop circle, so I decide to say hello and ask him what he thinks.

"About this one?" he asks in perfect English with a hint of a Germanic accent. "Oh, this is man made for sure; the sheaves have been broken. On genuine ones, the sheaves are bent but there is no damage."

"Genuine ones?" I ask.

"Yes, the ones that are created by alien technology do not cause any damage. For example, the Arecibo Circle at Chilbolton in Hampshire ... that appeared overnight with a copy of the message that Earth-based telescopes had sent out into space and a reply nearby."

I was aware of the interstellar message but had not heard of the crop circle reply.

"You have an interest then?" I ask.

"I have been coming to Wiltshire from Austria every year for the last six years. It's such a fascinating and ancient place," he says.

"How many circles do you think are alien?" I ask.

Adjusting his bag, he replies, "In the beginning, there was a high proportion. But now there are professional teams, such as Team Satan, who produced the "mother ship" circle, and there are crop circle teams that reproduce album covers, such as the one for the pop star Lorde."

He continued on, looking rather sad: "It's all very corporate now, but there is hope. A crop circle team recently produced a design for a free energy machine in a crop circle which appeared in Italy. Free energy is the key to the survival of the human race.”

Feeling we were moving off topic, I ask him how long he is staying and where he is going next?

“I will go to the crop circle museum in Pewsey and, of course, the Barge Inn; it’s such an interesting place to meet people.”

“The Barge Inn? As in a Pub?” I ask excitedly.

“Yes, of course. The Barge is the center of the crop circle community. You must go of course.”

I thank him for his time, and he walks off backwards toward the center of the circle, thanking us with his hands clasped together, as if in prayer, gently nodding as he goes.

A Haven for the New Age and the Curious

Back in the van, the rain has returned. The evening sky has a mixture of darks and reds, with the last bright eyelets of sunlight trying to burst through the clouds.

We drive to the Barge Inn, a 15-minute journey away. We pass the ancient site of Silbury Hill, nearly 4,000 years old, and I imagine how it would have looked in its original form, bright white from the packed chalk, and how much it must have resembled the pyramids of Giza in their prime.

We drive past the daddy of them all, West Kennet Long Barrow. It is more than 5,500 years old, older than anything else in the area. For me, it’s one of the most impressive, structures with its large stones blocking the entrance and pitch-black separated tombs deep inside the mound, where the remains of our ancestors had been laid thousands of years ago. The bones may be gone, but one can’t help feeling their spirit essence have remained.

Driving up the stoned chipped road to the Barge Inn, the weather takes a turn for the worse, as the rain falls steadily. I am determined to get a quick pint before the weather prevents us from driving home.

Driving past a wood yard, the smell of freshly cut wood strong enough to make it through the rain, we pull into a yard with an imposing three-story building directly ahead of us. The Barge Inn is situated up a small bank overlooking the canal.

In the car park and adjacent campsite, there is a mixture of top-of-the-range camper vans, converted horse boxes, and red transit vans. There are figures rushing between the pub and their vehicles, trying to stay dry. We exit the van and quickly jog up the steps to the side entrance of the Inn.

As we walk in the side entrance, it looks like a social club; tables and chairs are in the corners and a long bar is in the center of the room. As we look up, we’re met with an amazing painted mural on the ceiling, depicting all the ancient monuments of the Wiltshire area. The image is interspersed with crop circles, with their circular, square, and swirling patterns.

There are other images as well — star constellations, a green man, and a Norwich City Football Club badge! We look upwards, open mouthed, as we walk over to the bar. There is a mixture of people in the bar. Like the car park, it’s new age, as well as new money.

I talk to the barmaid, and behind her, through the window, I see a family, but mainly a dad, attempting to put up a tent in the wind and the rain. The barmaid, a former fitness instructor wearing a Batman T-shirt and fiddling with her blue dreadlocks, explains that the mural was done in 1997 at the height of the crop circle interest.

“They Croppies used to meet here in their teams and plan their next project. I don’t think people realize the work and the planning that goes into it. The math and geometry alone amaze me. Then there is always some link to the Golden Ratio and pi. They were quite deep. They wanted to give the world a message of harmony.”

The numbers are associated with the idea that all nature, humans included, are created at a 1.61 ratio and the importance of the pi number for geometry.

“The croppies did all the circles then. What about aliens?” I ask with a smile.

She laughs and brushes back her dreadlocks. “No, not for me. I mean why have all that technology and come all this way just to make a circle in a field in Wiltshire?!”

“Well, to communicate with us, the same way the Croppies wanted to?”

“Maybe, but I think the farmers care who did it, as it cost them a fortune in lost crops. It was the farmers that put a stop to it in the end.”

Through the window a dad is being dragged around by a billowing tent, and we finish our drinks and wish the Barge Inn a fond farewell.

A Vortex of Mystery

The area around Avebury stone circle has always been a special place. Over half of all crop circles occur within 15 km of it. The circles are sometimes easily attributed to the “Croppies,” who used to frequent The Barge Inn. But others are more intricate and appear in hours when they should take days or weeks. Even the man-made ones, such as the structure at Green Street, have some incredible unexplainable qualities.

Are these lines magnetic fields? Or is it trans-dimensional? Either way, I think they are positive places, with the people in them feeling happy and excited to be there. Are they all man-made? Well, I don’t think so.

Inside the Barge Inn, we’re met with an amazing painted mural on the ceiling, depicting ancient monuments of the Wiltshire area, as well as crop circles interspersed in the image.

Just like UFO sightings, 95% can be explained away. But it’s the golden nuggets, the unexplainable, that we as researchers are after. I do believe that legitimate alien crop circles are out there or being planned, and we are just waiting with anticipation and excitement to find them and try to understand what it is they are trying to telling us. ♦

Beyond the Dream

Unraveling the Tapestry of Consciousness

By Rainbow Radaelli

Billions of people around the world experience dreams on a daily basis, but what happens when there's other types of cognitive wayfaring in the mix? This can muddy the waters and confuse the experienter.

If we include remote viewing, out-of-body experiences or astral projection, the confusion never ends. Yet, remember these are just terms. But are they the terms for the same thing?

I added one more term from many years ago, and this is what we call our YouTube channel Dimensional Walking. I didn't help with the confusion here, but I do believe there is a difference between some of these terms, while others are just a prolific potpourri of the same thing.

With so many people awakening from a slumbered trance, the paved road to enlightenment has been set with idyllic markers that make the journey easier. But what if all these sagacious terms point to the same direction; what does a person do then?

Discernment needs to come into play, but I have also found that I prefer the road less traveled. Sometimes the markers are few and far between, leading me to backtrack my edifying journey.

Memory Recall

Memory recall isn't just remembering the conversation that you had yesterday. It's something more primordial that is ingrained in our psyche and allows us to remember past lives. Meditation helps, but sometimes we carry memories with us that pop out in the most unexpected ways.

For me, it happened when I was driving my car on a busy road. I was zapped by a flash of white light, and all my memories of working with aliens crossed my third eye like a movie screen. The memory blocks were lifted. It was the shock of my life!

While in Egypt, I entered temples and was enveloped with memories and feelings of when I was a priestess and priest many lifetimes ago. Feelings and memories go hand in hand. The most potent memory recall was when I remembered Marc Antony complaining about his uncomfortable outfit while a procession of dancers was preparing a dance for me. And yes, I was Cleopatra.

Isis spoke to me, and the realization that I heard her voice catapulted me into an emotional frenzy of gratitude. It was quite the eye opener, because I just couldn't believe that I could forget something so powerful and significant. When she spoke, my whole body vibrated and her words became mine.

Astral Projection

Astral projection, also known as out-of-body experience, can actually be another word for dimensional walking. Many people claim to see their bodies from their raised position above, looking down.

It's considered nonphysical travel, which means you leave your body at home or in a protected state while traveling dimensions, realms, alien worlds, and galaxies far, far away.

Remote Viewing

Remote viewing has always intrigued me, and this is because I believe I learned how to remote view from my alien instructor, Meekmohan. Their minds are capable of traveling through space and expanding time in order to see things happening in the past, present, and future, all the while filtering out human drama.

with

Teaching this to humans isn't easy, and I truly feel that if I would have stayed longer and learned from the Grays and Meekmohan, my abilities would be much more formidable than what they are today.

Remote viewing is described as using psychic abilities to obtain information from a key location or person that is blocked to the average person. It's taking a specific science protocol and marrying it with psychic potential. Combined, you have an ability to see secretive locations forbidden from the outside world, objects from other realms, and beings that otherwise would be invisibly cloaked from the human eye.

The Dream Realm

The dream realm is my favorite place to be. Sometimes I deal with the scariest plots of darkened hallways and mythical creatures coming to life, but for the most part, I am in my element exploring uncharted worlds, dimensions, or the heavenly realms.

We learn from dreams, we heal while dreaming, and the best part is we expand our universe every night as we rest our weary heads upon our pillows.

Sometimes, I can't wait to fall asleep!

Out-of-Body Experience

The out-of-body experience is a mystifying phenomenon that goes beyond the human experience into uncharted waters of Heaven and Hell and destinations that go beyond the void of perception. If it's intentional, it's an exceptional feat. If it's by accident, it can carry the weight of fears that people hold onto regarding the unknown.

Remote viewers have been known to go out of body for a more in-depth look at specific targets. A psychic can stay within their body and mind while searching for answers. But, I must say, the only drawback with leaving the body would be if the body is in a vulnerable state.

There are drawbacks to any of these various excursions, but the one that haunts me the most is when I leave my body to go exploring. I feel we are tethered to our bodies, and once that tether is cut or untied, the problem of the unconnected self has a whole new meaning.

Visions

When I was around six years old, I saw a vision of Jesus. He was standing at the foot of my bed in the dark of night. He was illuminated, with light coming from all around him. And he outstretched his arms to me and told me to go to him.

I rubbed my tired eyes since I was nudged awake from sleeping. I was in a bit of a pickle, because as much as I wanted to go to him, I was a daddy's girl. So, I decided that if I had to hang with one or the other, it was going to be my dad. I don't think Jesus held it against me. And to this day, I have always wondered why he came to me.

I also experienced Mother Mary with other religious visions. They were very intense, and from everything I have witnessed and experienced thus far in my life, they are the ones that left the most intense impression on my psyche.

What's Really in a Name?

With all this being said, what really is in a name? Well, each type of experience is in its own unique genre, and I think this has to be acknowledged and respected. But at the end of the day, since I have experienced most of them, I would have to say, my dimensional walking is the most comfortable and one that I experience over and over again.

Thunder Bow told me something that didn't seem possible at the time. He said that there might be one day when I will have to choose either to stay here or venture off into the realms of unimaginable possibilities. Those possibilities to this day still mystify me, so at this point in my life I plan on staying right here.

But I have to say, traveling to those realms is just as much a part of me as waking up remembering I was some place unlike anything in this world. The best part is that those endless possibilities of places to visit are just waiting for me. All I have to do is open myself up to the magic of the Universe. ♦

The 1973 Hunter Army Airfield Incident

By Cheryl Lynn Carter

Hunter Army Airfield, located near Savannah, Georgia, operates in conjunction with Fort Stewart, which is 40 miles to the southwest. The two bases are home to the Army's Flight Training Center (USAFTC), which provides educational instruction and flight training for the new AH-1G Cobra attack helicopter crews.

Personnel assigned to the 298th Military Police Detachment are responsible for investigating suspicious activity, performing security checks on various facilities, and conducting base perimeter checks through regular patrols.

On September 8, 1973, MP Specialists-4 Bart J. Burns, age 22, and Randy Shade, age 23, were patrolling the base runways. It was an ordinary day in every way, except for one thing.

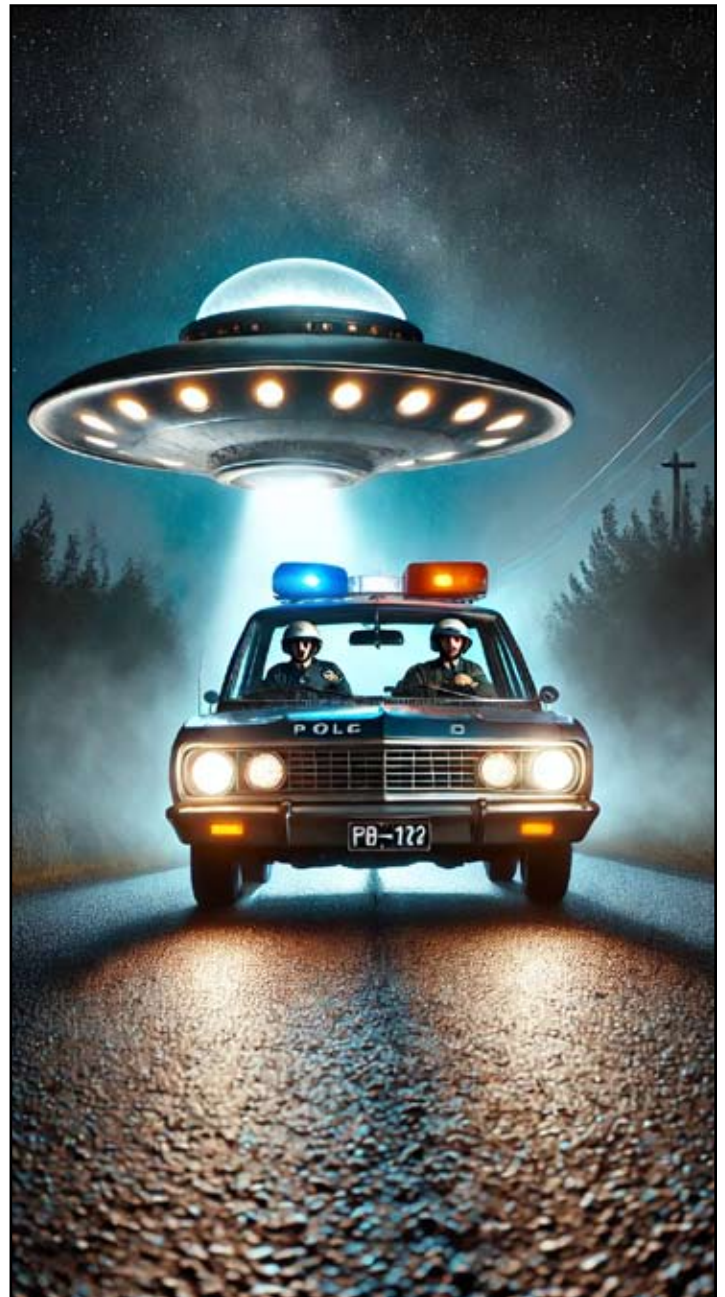

Around 2:30 a.m., they observed a bright cluster of multi-colored flashing lights tracking across the night sky. At first, MP Burns, who had previously served as a helicopter crew chief, considered the possibility that it might be lighting on an aircraft. But something about it didn't feel right. He estimated the lights to be at an altitude of 2,000 feet. Burns and Shade watched the lights until they disappeared behind tall trees.

The men continued their patrol along the taxiways near the northern perimeter of the base. At about 2:45 a.m., they observed unidentified lights in the sky again as they drove along the perimeter road adjacent to Montgomery Crossroad. MP Shade thought these looked like the same group of flashing lights they had seen earlier.

This time, the lights were hovering near the end of the runway. He stopped the vehicle so he could get out and get a better look at whatever it was.

Unidentified Aerial Encounter: A Harrowing Pursuit

At this point, the MPs thought the object could be a helicopter, even though there was no apparent sound. Then, suddenly, the phenomena dropped just above tree level and came straight toward them. It was now obvious public information officer, notified the Pentagon of the UFO report, which in turn transmitted a Serious Incident Report to Army Headquarters and Army Forces Command.

Local law enforcement in Chatham County was notified. They said there had been over 20 civilian reports of unidentified lights in the area. One local police report stated that two police officers witnessed the UFO dive at Hunter Airfield.

Lieutenant L. B. Fields observed the object from several miles away and watched it for 10 minutes before it disappeared. Another police officer observed the same object hovering about 5,000 feet above the ground and described it as being similar to a mercury vapor light.

The Chatham County Police Department was so concerned that it tried to have a pilot on standby at Travis Field in case the UFO returned the next day. In addition, the U.S. Coast Guard's USCG Savannah Air Station was asked for assistance.

Media Frenzy and Military Silence

Amazingly, the following morning the Savannah Morning News ran a two-page story, with the heading: "Wreck at Hunter Field." They reported that during a routine patrol around the perimeter of the airfield, an unidentified flying object swooped out of the sky, dove toward the MPs' vehicle, and forced them off the road.

The Atlanta Constitution also published an article titled "Saucers Sighted in Savannah."

Twenty-four hours later, on September 9, MP Burns was patrolling the Hunter runway with MP Alexander S. Murray, the military desk sergeant. Sergeant Murray wanted to go back to the exact location where they had encountered the object the previous night.

At first, they were disappointed as there was nothing unusual in the sky. Then at 4:30 a.m., they observed what Sergeant Murray thought was a red navigation beacon from an aircraft in the distance. As they watched, it moved at a high rate of speed before disappearing into the woods. He looked at MP Burns and asked, "Is that what you saw?" to which he replied, "Yes."

Two weeks later, the two MPs stopped talking about the incident. Then they were both transferred to different military installations; the military's way of ensuring they don't talk to each other again.

The Hunter Incident marked the last time military personnel were allowed to speak freely to newspapers. The Pentagon went to great measures to ensure silence. ♦ that what they were looking at was not a helicopter. The cluster of lights was actually underneath a metallic saucer-shaped craft that was approximately 50 feet in diameter.

The men stood there in amazement, not certain of what action to take if any. The craft began moving above the 702nd Radar Squadron building located near the ammunition dump. Seconds later, it moved uncomfortably close to them. It was at this point that MP Shade decided they should get back into their vehicle and head to the main guard building as quickly as possible.

They drove away with the craft in pursuit, reaching a speed of a hundred miles per hour. MP Shade began having difficulty seeing through the windshield because of the flashing-colored lights above them. If the craft had come any closer, it would have made contact with the top of their vehicle. Suddenly, the craft dove down, barely missing the blue warning light on the top of the vehicle. This caused MP Shade to lose control. He drove off the road and into a ditch.

While the officers attempted to remove the vehicle from the ditch, they observed the craft hovering nearby for 15 minutes. It had brilliant, flashing lights that were blue, white, and amber in color.

After getting the vehicle back on the road, they resumed their way back to headquarters. The craft continued to follow them at tree-top level but kept within 100 feet. When they finally reached headquarters, the craft veered off and disappeared.

Official Report Sparks Investigation

The MPs wrote an official report at the Provost Marshal's office at Fort Stewart. Checks were made regarding local aircraft movement and radar coverage; however, there was no additional information explaining the UFO.

DIY ENERGY HEALING TECHNIQUES

EMPOWER YOURSELF WITH SIMPLE PRACTICES

By Chad Wilson

Maintaining your well-being and balancing your energies is crucial. Energy healing, an ancient practice from various cultures, offers simple yet effective techniques that can be easily integrated into your daily routines.

These techniques include grounding, aura cleansing, and self-Reiki, all which can help you take control of your wellness.

Grounding: Connect With the Earth's Energy

Grounding, also known as earthing, involves connecting your body to the Earth's energy to stabilize and rejuvenate your energy field. Here's a simple step-by-step guide to grounding:

Step 1: Find a Quiet Space: Choose a quiet outdoor area, preferably with grass, soil, or sand.

Step 2: Remove Your Shoes: Stand barefoot to directly connect with the Earth's surface.

Step 3: Relax and Breathe: Take a few deep breaths, inhaling through your nose and exhaling through your mouth.

Step 4: Visualize: Imagine roots growing from the soles of your feet, extending deep into the Earth.

Step 5: Feel the Connection: Focus on the sensation of energy rising from the Earth, filling your body with stability and calmness.

Step 6: Stay Grounded: Spend at least 10–15 minutes in this state, allowing yourself to absorb the Earth's energy.

Aura Cleansing: Refresh Your Energy Field

Your aura, the energy field surrounding your body, can become cluttered with negative energies. Regular cleansing helps maintain a healthy and vibrant aura.

Here's how to cleanse your aura:

Step 1: Prepare Your Space: Find a quiet, comfortable space where you won't be disturbed.

Step 2: Light a Sage Bundle or Incense: Use sage or incense to cleanse the space and yourself.

Step 3: Set Your Intention: Close your eyes, and set a clear intention to cleanse and refresh your aura.

Step 4: Visualize Light: Imagine a bright white or golden light surrounding your body.

Step 5: Sweep Away Negativity: Use your hands to “sweep” away any negative energy, starting from your head and moving down to your feet.

Step 6: Seal Your Aura: Visualize a protective shield of light around your aura, keeping it clean and vibrant.

Reiki: Promote Self-Healing

Reiki is a Japanese technique that involves channeling universal life force energy to promote healing and relaxation. Practicing self-Reiki can be a powerful way to boost your well-being. Follow these steps:

Step 1: Find a Quiet Space: Sit or lie down in a comfortable, quiet place.

Step 2: Relax and Center Yourself: Close your eyes, take deep breaths, and center your mind.

Step 3: Activate Your Energy: Rub your hands together briskly to activate the energy flow.

Step 4: Place Your Hands: Place your hands on or just above different parts of your body, starting from the head and moving down to the feet. Common positions include the forehead, throat, heart, stomach, and solar plexus.

Step 5: Focus on Each Position: Spend 3–5 minutes on each position, visualizing healing energy flowing from your hands into your body.

Step 6: Close the Session: Finish the session by placing your hands in a prayer position and expressing gratitude for the healing energy.

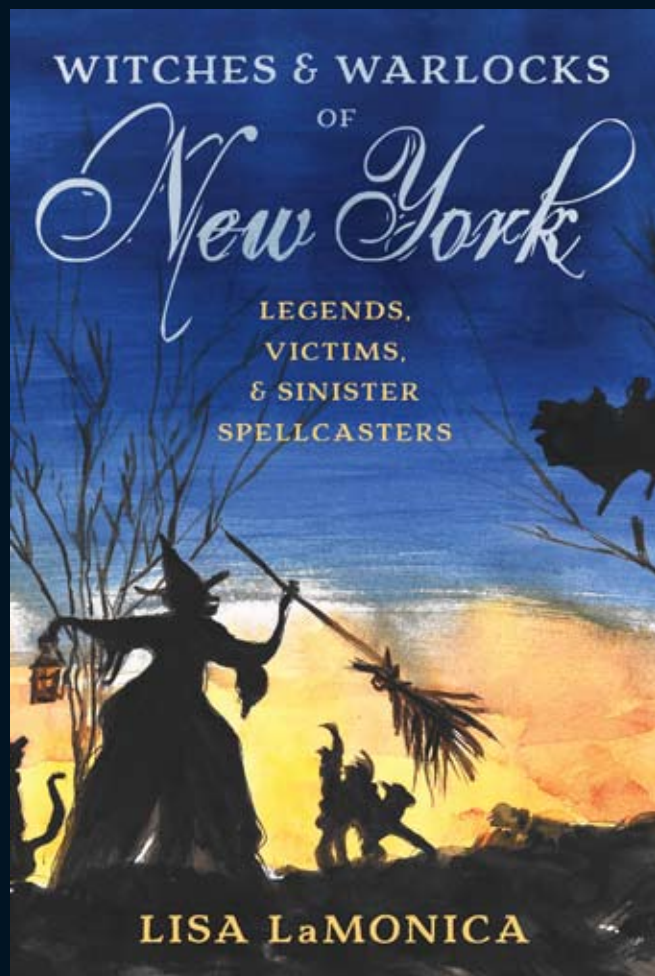

Incorporating Energy Healing Into Daily Routines

Integrating these energy healing practices into your daily life can enhance your overall well-being. Here are some tips for making these techniques a regular part of your routine:

- Starting your day with a grounding session can set a stable foundation for the hours ahead.
- During your lunch break, taking a few minutes for aura cleansing can help refresh your energy.
- In the evening, a self-Reiki session can promote relaxation and ensure a restful sleep.

HARNESSING THE POWER OF BLOODSTONE

By Dr. Athena Perrakis, Sage Goddess

Bloodstone, also known as heliotrope, is our absolute favorite for pain relief and a versatile go-to stone for any kind of healing. This unique crystal is primarily composed of evergreen jasper with striking inclusions of red jasper and sometimes yellow jasper.

The red specks resembling drops of blood are iron oxide, while the yellow inclusions are known as the “plasma” of bloodstone. This beautiful combination makes bloodstone a visually distinctive and energetically potent gem.

Bloodstone Origins and Naming Legends

Bloodstone is found in various locations worldwide, with one of the most significant sources being India, hence the common term Indian Bloodstone. This stone is steeped in history and mythology, with fascinating stories about how it got its name:

- Roman Legends: In ancient Rome, soldiers carried bloodstone into battle, believing it would protect them from harm. If injured, they would press the stone against their wounds, harnessing its healing powers to aid in recovery.
- Christian Lore: According to Christian legend, the ground at Jesus Christ’s crucifixion site was green (representing the evergreen jasper). When his blood fell to the earth, it was absorbed by the stone, giving rise to the distinctive red specks. Each piece of bloodstone is thought to carry the essence of this sacred event.

MY TALK WITH GOD

By Willie Windwalker Gibson

I was brought up Pentecostal. My father was Native-American born in the hills of Kentucky. My Grandfather was a coal miner and farmer but a firm believer in God and the supernatural world.

Therefore, my father raised me to believe in the same thing. Throughout my journeys in the supernatural, I have seen many things that could not be explained. I knew that God had a lot to do with it.

My wife, Schmon, had a blister that formed on her right heel. At first, her general practitioner had a wound care nurse handle it. It gradually got bigger and turned into a diabetic ulcer. The wound-care nurse sought out a podiatrist to take over the wound.

After a small amount of time, the wound became necrotic and had to be debrided several times and grafted. The wound kept getting worse, and a vascular doctor was called in, who found the wound had become osteomyelitis.

The infection had gone into the bone of her right leg. The doctor told us in order to stop the infection the leg had to be taken above the knee. The only recourse was to amputate.

After talking it through with my Schmon, we agreed that to save her life, the leg had to go.

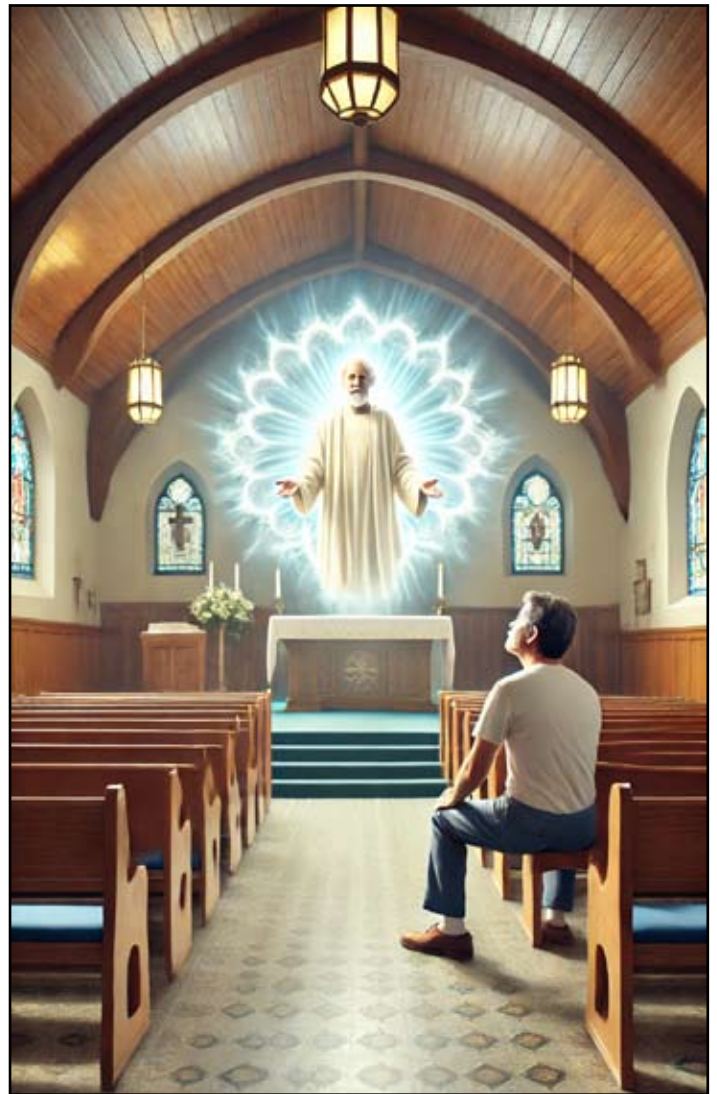

As we sat in pre-op, I placed my right hand above my wife's right knee. I transferred as much energy as I had into her leg. I watched them take my wife into surgery knowing when she came out her leg would be gone.

I walked to the hospital chapel, and I sat in the first pew to have a talk with God.

"God, I've been your servant since the age of 10," I said. "I have helped the sick and dying for you. I have asked nothing for myself. But now, God, I ask for you to help my wife through this so she can live. Amen."

I went back to the waiting room to wait for the doctor's call. The call came about two hours later. Schmon was fine and was awake in recovery. He told me her room number and to go up and wait for her. I did, and about a half hour later, they wheeled her in.

I could see that her leg was gone. As she came in, she saw me, and said, "Hi, hun. You OK?" I knew then she was fine. The nurse asked my wife was she hungry. Schmon said yes, so the nurse brought her a burger and fries.

I knew this was only the beginning. There would be days of crying and rehab and then the fitting for a prosthetic. But I knew that my talk with God would help her get through it. ♦
